Rama University recognizes that its true strength lies in its intangible assets — the inventions, ideas, innovations, literary and artistic creations of its knowledgeable faculty and talented students. To safeguard and promote these intellectual contributions, the University established the Intellectual Property Rights (IPR) Cell in 2017.

The Cell operates under the guidance of a dedicated committee chaired by the Director and coordinated by the Registrar, to manage all activities related to intellectual property. This includes facilitating the filing of patents, research papers, books, copyrights, and other creative works produced by the faculty, staff, and students.

The primary objective of the IPR Cell is to promote awareness and understanding of intellectual property laws, encourage innovation, and strengthen the University's legal and scientific outlook toward IPR. It also strives to foster collaborations with industries, thereby enhancing innovation-driven growth and contributing to wealth creation and societal development.

Serving as the nodal center for all IPR-related matters, the Cell supports and guides innovators within the University community in transforming their creative ideas into recognized intellectual property assets.

Each year, nearly 300,000 women die due to complications related to pregnancy and childbirth. Over 2 million newborns die within their first month of life, and another 2 million are stillborn—most of these deaths are preventable. Alarmingly, four out of five countries are not on track to meet the 2030 targets for maternal survival, and one in three will miss newborn mortality goals.

This year's campaign calls on governments, health systems, and communities to enhance care before, during, and after childbirth. It emphasizes not only addressing obstetric complications but also mental health, noncommunicable diseases, and family planning—ensuring comprehensive, respectful, and quality care for women and newborns.

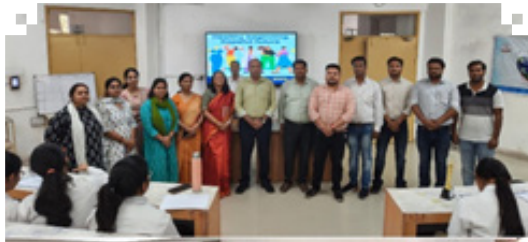

The day was celebrated under the guidance of Dr. Prof. Anju Gahlot (HOD) Department of Community Medicine in college. Dignitaries present were Dr. Prof. Anju Gahlot, Dr. Prof. Atul Kumar Singh, Dr. Anas Ahmad Khan, Dr. S.P. Singh, Dr. Chitra Chauhan, Dr. Poonam Kushwaha.

Theme: 'Healthy beginnings, Hopeful Futures'.
